Origin & Development of the Figural Character Pitcher

The figural character pitcher is descended from a long line of anthropomorphic vessels from ancient times. Long before recorded history, images of living things were being made from clay. Archeologists have found evidence of pottery figures dating back to the Stone Age, and some think such figures were being made even before utilitarian earthenware pots and pitchers.

Pottery figures over 6,000 years old have been found in Egypt and figural pitchers over 4,000 years old have been discovered in Crete, home of the Ancient Minoan civilization. Numerous examples of ancient jugs, cups, pots and other vessels made in the likeness of humans, animals and mythical beings have been unearthed in Greece, Italy, and throughout the Roman Empire, including Great Britain. Over the same period, ancient Peruvian and other South American civilizations produced a wide range of hand molded figural jugs and vessels. In North America as well, many examples of jugs and bottles made in human likeness have been discovered.

By the mid-1500s, small faïence pitchers in the form of a seated man or woman, called Jacquot and Jacqueline, became popular in France. These human shaped pitchers recall the romantic story of Jacqueline de Bavière, a courageous countess who escaped imprisonment by her cousin and arch rival to lead her troops and successfully preserve her heritable lands.

The next major development in figural pitchers was the first appearance of the ubiquitous 18th century English Toby jug. The first Toby creator is not conclusively known. Some date Toby's creation to around 1750, but most believe it to be slightly later, somewhere between 1760 and 1770. Various historians have bestowed the honor of being Toby's creator on one of several well known potters of the period, including John Astbury, Thomas Whieldon, Ralph and Aaron Wood, as well as John Voyez, an apprentice of both Josiah Wedgwood and Ralph Wood.

Virtually overnight the Toby Jug became a popular figure in homes and taverns throughout Staffordshire and all of England. With a tricorn hat that was perfect for pouring, the primary purpose of the Toby Jug was as a beverage vessel, as was that of the Pots Jacqueline before him.

Production of the figural Toby Jug grew through the late 18th and early 19th century with the creation of a wide variety of characters and derivative forms, including being produced in the beautiful Victorian majolica finish that swept the world after the 1851 Crystal Palace Great Exhibition in London.

Although not strictly Toby or Character Jugs per the British vernacular, the production of figural character pitchers by German manufacturers, both prominent and lesser, in the early 20th century are a highly sought after collecting field in and of itself.

In the period before and after World war I, both Royal Tettau Porcelain, marketing under the trade name Royal Bayreuth, and Schafer & Vater, produced a wide variety of figural jugs in soft paste porcelain bisque and in several sizes, which were commonly referred to as cream, milk, water and lemonade pitchers. While production from both factories is highly desired, the Royal Bayreuth line is more actively sought after by collectors and commands a higher price.

Another major German manufacturer of figural character pitchers was W. Goebel Porzellanfabrik, which produced a large variety of characters from 1935 up through the 1980s. The Friar Tuck line is the most familiar and comes as a Character Jug, Toby Jug, tankard and in numerous derivative forms. When dressed in a red robe, he becomes Cardinal Tuck.

Other German manufactures that produced highly sought after figural pitchers were Sitzendorfer Porzellanmanufaktur in the 1930s and 1940s and Sandizell Porcelain in the 1950s and 1960s. Also, the Philadelphia firm of Eberling and Reuss imported numerous German figural pitchers, marketing them under the trade name Erphila. There is no record of which potteries produced these jugs, as the firm imported wares from many factories in Germany, Czechoslovakia and Austria. However, the similarity of the Dickens figural pitchers to the Goebel ones, makes it highly likely those were produced by the latter.
Schafer & Vater
Rudolstadt, Germany

Founded by Gustav Schafer and Gunther Vater in 1890, Schafer & Vater was a high quality porcelain manufacturer located in Volkstedt Rudolstadt, Thuringa, Germany. The company enjoyed almost immediate success with its hard paste and soft paste porcelain designs. The firm closed in 1962 and the dormant factory was destroyed by the East German government in 1972.

Today the company is perhaps best known for its detailed and comical figural ware, many of which appear as figural character pitchers, match strikers, bottles and more. Its figural pitchers are commonly found in full colorways or a blue colorway. Green, pink and red colorways are more scarce, but also known.

Schafer and Vater marked its products with an impressed R inside a star and topped by a crown, although many examples are found unmarked. Four digit model numbers can also be found impressed on the base of the pieces and some pieces are stamped Made in Germany in black or blue ink.

Blackamoors, or Black Moors, were people of color from North Africa who worked as servants and slaves in wealthy European households in the 1500s to 1700s.

Blackamoor is a European art style from the Early Modern period depicting highly stylized figures, usually African males but sometimes other non-European races, in subservient or exotic form.

About the Authors

Steve Mullins was a graduate of Dartmouth College and the University of Michigan Business School and was Chairman of a Chicago based real estate investment firm. He started collecting Toby and Character jugs as a teenager seventy years ago. Today the collection numbers over 8,300 jugs from around the world, dating from those earliest produced in the 1760s to the latest 21st Century ones. The collection is now on display in the American Toby Jug Museum in Evanston, Illinois.

David Fastenau is a graduate Engineer from Iowa State University and Santa Clara University Leavey School of Business, and is currently semi-retired on Kauai with his wife, Michelle. David's collecting passion for figural pitchers and Toby jugs was spurred when he inherited a small collection of Royal Doulton Character and Toby jugs from his grandmother. His collection continues to grow and now numbers over 800 full bodied figural pitchers and Toby jugs. Together, he and his wife have raised five children and were recently blessed with their second grandchild.
World War II Allied Leaders Toby Jug Collection

Released in 2017, the new Wilkinson World War II Allied Leaders Collection has been inspired by the original World War I Allied Commanders Toby Jug set designed by F. Carruthers Gould and produced by A. J. Wilkinson, Ltd. between 1915 and 1919. This iconic set of eleven jugs featured famous World War I statesmen and military leaders. Today, the pieces in this original series have become some of the most sought after toby jugs ever produced. The Wilkinson company’s plans for a similar WWII collection was cancelled due to the demands of the war effort in Britain and the series was never created.

The American Toby Jug Museum in Evanston, Illinois (of which co-author of this Supplement, Steve Mullins is the Curator) has brought this idea to fruition with a special commission of Toby jugs based on the greatest World War II military and political leaders. This collection was modeled by Ray Noble, one of England’s most gifted and renowned modelers. Following the Wilkinson style, each new Toby is eleven inches tall and holds a symbolic artifact. Further iconic details and quotes are incorporated in the handle and base designs. The collection was produced in Staffordshire England by Bairstow Manor Pottery and each Toby jug is handcrafted and hand painted by master craftsmen.

A Century of Royal Doulton Character & Toby Jugs is a unique reference book in the collectives field. The most comprehensive book ever published on this 20th Century collecting phenomenon, it provides the most extensive information ever gathered together in a single volume. With an informative profile of every character, the text is lavishly illustrated with over 2,000 large color photographs of more than 1,300 separate jugs and derivatives, most of which never before have been compiled together in colored print.

Photographs of every Royal Doulton production jug and derivative of the past century produced to the date of publication are included, plus those of more than 100 prototype jugs, many of which will be new to the collector's eye.

The scope, details and pictorial abundance set this book apart from any other reference book on the subject.
